Bullock managed operations when Delta Airlines renovated the South Terminal ticket lobby at its Atlanta hub. Islands of check-in counters and dozens of self-serve check-in kiosks were created to streamline the flow of passengers and eliminate bottleneck caused by a long wall of check-in counters.

Bullock's roles in the $30-million fast-track design and construction assignment included architecture and engineering oversight, construction management and rapid on-site scope and phasing change management. Client personnel were also trained in construction contract administration and project management.
